LETTER FROM VIRGINIA.

LEESBURG, November 7, 1861. Engrous Appeal: What the future policy of Seward may prove, seems to be foreshadowed, perhaps, in expeditions daily preparing for the visintion and scourging of our coasts. That "the subjugation of the South" is not seriously gostsuplated even in their wildest dreams, is evident in the very significant fact, that they would never attempt to selze and destroy, if "reconstruction" or "reconciliation" was positively intended; for the South, they know, can breek humiliation and coercion the least of any people in the world; and that once having attempted both, and failed, all efforts to prove abornive and humiliating to theme field with its regiments of man, well-a med as selves. LONDON, October 19.—The steamer Bermuda, with a cargo of arms and temmenthon, has run the blockude and reached Savannah in safety So we are told from America, and the secsionists here are exultant. They say that this will, in the first place, show the European goveruments how wenk the blocknote is, and enconrage them to break it; and they say, beside that there was powder and clothing enough o heard of her to place their army on an effect footing. In short, I see no reason to doubt what I have stated, that this success is as good to them as ten thousand lives.

It is likely to cost us at least that. With all our fleet it seems atrange that we could not eatch this yeard, for I monliect that as early as the 24th of August, I mentioned the runor here that such a vessel had sailed, and that our authorithe lare knew of it. It could have been no other than this same vessel, and of course the navy department must have had still earlier knowledge than that, and yet the Bermuda seems to have gone straight in, without trouble, To say the least, it is annoying, and what are the consequences? We have nearly heard this news which we see it announced in all the papers that a steamer called the Fingal, freighted with an enormous quantity of munitions of war of every sort, has left the Clyde nominally for Madeira and the west const of Africa, but of
